Rules and regulations

- View wildlife from a safe distance which is good for both you and them.
- Respect their spatial needs
- To avoid stressing species or exposing them to danger, exercise control, care and caution during observation, photography, sound recording, or filming
- Familiarize yourself with and respect the behaviors and ecosystems of the wildlife you may come across.
- Acquaint yourself with the fragility of the ecosystem--stay on trails that are intended to lessen impact.
- Avoid going alone and ensure you have a field assistant / local tracker with you at all times.
- Avoid agitating the reptiles which may spook them or make them act in an unusual behavior.
- We don't encourage handling of venomous and non venomous species unless and until you have an experienced person from the Research Station present at the site.
- No crucial information, pictures should be released to any outside source without explicit permission from ARRS staff.
- A copy of all your photographs will be given to ARRS and will not be sourced outside without your prior permission. Credits will be rightly given to you and your organization for any of the pictures which may be used for education and conservation purpose. We expect the same from you, i.e Credit to be given to ARRS for any pictures used by you or your organization for any required purpose.
- Volunteers/ Visitors if participate in the king cobra telemetry project need to know that no crucial information, pictures should be released to any outside source without explicit permission from ARRS staff.
- ARRS holds its norms and values firm and reserves the right to send individuals away at any point.

To the best of my knowledge, the information I have provided on this application is accurate and up to date. I accept full responsibility for any contingency/ injury born by me in the field or during my stay at ARRS and will not hold ARRS, its staff, contractors and personnel responsible for the above. By signing this application, I agree to abide by all of the policies and procedures outlined to me by ARRS.
